

NANCY WYNNE SEES MANY PERSONS AND THINGS AT THE HORSE SHOW

Strange Happenings Add Their Quota to the Thoughts of All Who See Them—Children Are Much in Evidence and Greatly Interested

WHETHER it is that the war in Europe is really keeping people at home or not, it is hard to say; certain, however, it is that the attendance at the Drexel show has been far greater than usual, and the interest in all the things in the grand stand around the oval and even in the ring by members of the social world has been unprecedented.

Many strange little things happen these days, and one wonders if the world has really grown so callous that it no longer gasps when it sees former wives and husbands coming face to face, each with another helpmate, so-called, by his or her side. And the pity of it comes strongly to me when I see the little children of the first marriage looking so puzzled and sad and wishing to be with both. That is always the pity of it in many of these selfish divorces; it is the children who suffer. In these days it is as easy to get unmarried as it is to get married, and it is to be hoped that the laws may be made more stringent in these matters—when people know they are to stand each other for better or for worse, they did it, and that was the end of it.

This dissertation being neither here nor there, I will once more go back to the show. Mrs. Fred Schmidt was in her box yesterday, and with her was her small daughter Henrietta. I wondered why little Miss Henrietta was not showing some ponies this year, and asked why, and, my dears, do you remember it was last year that the little girl's pony, a prize winner, dropped dead at the show, and the dear little girl has remained true to that pony and has mourned him ever since, refusing to have another in her pet's place. Pretty Mrs. Schmidt gave her whole attention to her little daughter all day.

The Stanley Reeves kiddies were awfully cute. The elder is the image of his father, and the second one is so small his nose is scarcely formed yet, and even so he was dressed in a sailor suit, with long trousers, and had a small middy's tam on the side of his head.

Mr. and Mrs. "Billy" Clothier's little daughter is so cunning, and is early showing her love for horses. She was with her mother on Tuesday, dressed in a white muslin frock, with tiny cuffs and broad collar edged with narrow blue ruffles, and the ends of the tiny muslin wash were also edged with ruffles of blue.

One hears passing strange tales now and again, and the latest is remarkable, to say the least. We are told it is not according to etiquette or ethics, or anything for that matter, for girls to accept valuable presents from men, unless they intend to marry them. This code seems to be entirely disregarded by present-day young America. I know of a girl who told a man about seven years her senior she would marry him, and proceeded to allow him to send her presents—a wrist watch, jeweled bracelet, pins and an exquisite comb adorned with gold. Well, she decided she did not love him after all, and so broke it off, which was right beyond all arguments, as love must have a large part in married happiness, but, my dears, this girl has kept every one of that man's presents, and does not even suggest returning them. Did you ever?
